ABSTRACT

A browser parses an XHTML document to identify links in the document that are marked up with the accesskey attribute and forms an options list containing the links, so that they can be selected independently of their position in the document.